

Act 5 Quote

“O happy dagger! This is thy sheath; there rust; and let me die”

Juliet: Act V Scene iii

This quote was said by Juliet in the act five the final scene. This quote was said after Juliet woke from her deep slumber and finds Romeo dead on the floor beside her. This quote means in regular terms; Oh lucky dagger my chest is where you shall lie for all time, please oh please kill me. This quote is important to the play because this is the last thing that we hear from both Romeo and Juliet say in this play. In loving relationships you can sometimes feel like without the person you love you have no reason to live. In real life this quote still has meaning. When you are in a relationship and you find that your partner is dead you feel that you can't live any longer and sometimes people actually do kill themselves over a lost love one.
